octagonal form cupola above high square base; clock in each face except rear, capped by open pediment supported on brackets; arched openings in belfry filled with louvers; cupola roof ogival.

Building T-shaped, center terminating in semicircular apse; this in one room with judge's chair on dais in apse. Chair built into paneled dado running under windows, both contemporary; balustrade across dais, and stair rail rebuilt from old balusters and rails; other woodwork 19th-century, including four columns supporting second floor. Stair ascending in hall to west of entrance original, but not elaborate, with turned balusters and moulded handrail. Room over courtroom said to be largest American paneled room.
